Happy Valentine's Day!

On February 14th, we like to celebrate all kinds of love! We love our friends, and our family, and our worms... and we really, really love the earth. After all, the earth is a pretty great place to live! The earth provides us with fresh air to breathe, fresh water to drink, and all sorts of plants and animals to provide us with delicious, healthy food. This Valentine's Day, we should do something nice for our loved ones AND the earth.

Make your own Valentine's Day cards and envelopes!

Handmade cards are creative, unique, and much more environmentally-friendly than buying brand new ones every year. This year, why not make your own? You can use art supplies that you already have, like paints and markers, construction paper, leftover wrapping or tissue paper, leftover ribbon, stickers... even cards from last year! Reusing and recycling old materials is an important part of being a good eco-citizen.

You can even fold your own envelopes out of scrap paper (blank side out) or leftover wrapping paper. See how: <http://www.wikihow.com/Make-an-Envelope>
